

Interior designer Sheila Bridges has always been drawn to toile, but when it came to her most intimate of projects—her home in Harlem—she couldn't find one to suit her style. Often the response of a great decorator, she decided to create her own. Harlem Toile started as a wallpaper, then branched out into a fabric, tabletop collection, and bed linen. Bridges's toile seeks to explore and "lampoon some of the stereotypes deeply woven into the African-American experience."
